In this lecture, I begin with the definition of a public good in general and note the difference between national and global public good. I discuss several examples of actual global public goods including climate change and why global public good provision may be more difficult than national public goods. In the rest of the lecture I focus on the problem of climate change and how it can possibly be addressed.